DIRECTOR'S NOTES

The character of Erwenter is at once poetic and comedic. I found what he says to be well worth remembering..."I tell you, and you must believe me that the joy of living is everywhere and available to all, but people have been blinded to it. It is there before them but they do not know it. It is priceless but they place no value on it. It is tempting but they are not tempted. It satisfies all longings, but they do not long. It offers youth, but they insist on growing old...The mind is the secret of youth.

TV and radio commercials, Barney Award winners, jazz singer, repairman, clown, hospital volunteer, teacher, nurse, independent salesman, painter...Although the majority of the cast are members of the "older generation", through their avid participation in life as well as this production, they admirably demonstrate that "being young is the way you think."
